From the Gazette of the United States.

MANAGEMENT OF THE SINKING FUND.

No. V.

In further defence of his doctrine Secretary Gallatin says, The proviso of the first section actually contemplates the cause of the money remaining unexpended for six months after the end of the calendar year, to which the annual appropriation refers, & provides, that under certain circumstances, such surplus shall cease to be at the disposition of the commissioners. On examining that proviso, it will be found that the contemplated case may occur, after the redemption of the whole debt, excepting the old 6 per cent. stock constituted in 1796, & the three per cent stock. In other words, the case provided for may occur, after the whole of the foreign debt, and the navy six per cent. stock and the temporary domestic loans, and the several species of stock bearing interest at eight per cent. five and an half per cent. & four & an half per cent. shall have been finally discharged. This may take place in the course of the year 1810 if the sum of 7,300,000 be faithfully applied in each year, to the extinguishment of so much interest and principal. After that period, the only remaining debt, reimbursable at the pleasure of the United States, would be the three per cent. stock and eighty thousand dollars of six per cent. stock constituted in 1796. The extinguishing annuity of eight per cent. on the old six per cent and deferred stocks, together with the interest on the remaining stock, would not then amount to 4,000,000 dollars annually; and consequently there would remain, of the annual appropriation, a surplus of more than 3,300,000 dls. Such might be the relative situation of the public debt, and the sinking fund. And it is to this case, that the proviso of the first section has reference. That every person may judge for himself, the proviso shall now be recited. It is in these terms—“Provided, That after the whole of the said debt, the old six per cent. stock, the deferred stock, the seventeen hundred and ninety-six six per cent. stock, and three per cent. stock excepted, shall have been reimbursed, any balance of the sum annually appropriated by this act which may remain unexpended at the end of six months next succeeding the end of the calendar year to which such annual appropriation refers, shall be carried to the surplus fund, and cease to be vested, by virtue of this act, in the commissioners of the sinking fund, and the appropriation, so far as relates to such unexpended balance, shall cease and determine.”

Notwithstanding the clumsiness of its phraseology, this proviso cannot, by any admissible rule of construction, be made to refer to any other case than that which had been stated. And in such case it might be not only proper, but peculiarly requisite, that a part of the annual appropriation should be allowed to remain unexpended: for the only portions of debt to which the surplus (of more than 3,300,000 dollars) could then be applied at pleasure, would be the three per cent stock, and the 80,000 dollars of six per cent stock constituted in 1796. The last might be immediately redeemed at par. The three per cent stock might also be reimbursed at the pleasure of the United States, on paying the nominal amount of the principal. And the creditors could not be required by the government to accept any thing less; although, considering the rate of interest, they may be willing to sell their stock in market, at thirty or forty per cent below par. But if more than three millions of the three per cents must, at all events, be purchased, on account of the sinking fund, in the course of one year; and if this should be perfectly understood by the stockholders, they could evidently command the market, at the expence of the sinking fund. In the case contemplated by the proviso, therefore, the three per cents with the old six per cent and deferred stock, may be purchased, in market, for account of the sinking fund, if they can be purchased on advantageous terms; but, if they cannot be purchased on such terms, the surplus of the annual appropriation may remain unexpended, and consequently there will not then be any peremptory obligation to apply the whole amount within the calendar year: and if it should not be practicable to expend any such surplus advantageously, by purchasing stock at market, within six months after the calendar year for which the money was appropriated, the unexpended balance shall thenceforth be considered as liberated from the sinking fund. Were it not for this proviso, the commissioners of the sinking fund, or rather their agent, after the year 1810, might have been required to pay twenty shillings on the pound for three per cents, or purchase the old six per cent and deferred stocks at such price as the holders should think proper to demand. The proviso follows the clause of appropriation in the first section of the act, and confirms the ideas which have been suggested with respect to that clause. It has in view the sums annually appropriated, and the end of the calendar year to which such annual appropriation refers; thus assuming it as the general principle, that the amount of each annual appropriation must be applied within the calendar year. Accordingly, a special provision is made for the particular case specified, that in such case a balance may remain unexpended after the calendar year, and that such balance, if it cannot be applied advantageously within the six months next succeeding, may be appropriated to other purposes. It is not improbable, that the idea was suggested by the act of the 3d of March, 1795. By the 12th section of that act, it was provided, that after the discharge of all the debts and loans therein described, excepting the stock bearing an interest of 3 per cent. the government should have liberty to make other appropriations of the funds. What then is the fair inference from the proviso now under consideration? Is it not clearly this? Until the contemplated case shall have occurred, the whole sum of 7,300,000 dollars as annually appropriated, must be applied, in each calendar year, to the discharge of interest and principal of the public debt. On this principle, we discern a reason for inserting the proviso. On any other principle, what is it but a preposterous parade of words?

Pickering of robbing the public treasury of millions of dollars—Wolcott of burning the war office, to conceal the knavery of the officers. These charges had been circulating throughout the union, and they ought to circulate, without check or hindrance, for the information of the abused people; but tho' their truth was as clear as a sun beam, they could not be proved in a court of justice; and for this plain reason, because they were not of a proper nature. Therefore the Sedition Law, inviting proof, when it was well known that proof was no where to be found, did but add insult to injury.

Q. In what manner did the passing the Sedition Law affect the characters of the former administration?

A. The Sedition Law mortally wounded the characters of those who passed it. It was the engine that pulled them down and plunged them in disgrace. The legislature of Virginia made and published spirited resolutions against the Sedition act: those resolutions were circulated over the United States. An instantaneous alarm was given through the country. Everywhere was it declared that the pernicious was shackled—that a blow had been aimed at the vitals of liberty—that the officers of government were wickedly plotting to hide their own villainy by suppressing free enquiry—that their reign had been “the reign of terror”—that the people were to be kept in ignorance of the doings of their rulers—that while they were thus hoodwinked, the yoke of slavery was intended to be riveted on their necks. The happiest effects were produced; the people were electrified; they were aroused; they were struck with horror; they were filled with indignation; they chased from office those corrupt men who had passed the Sedition Law, and supplied their places with characters distinguished for their patriotism.

Q. Since the reign of terror is ended, and the reign of equity and mildness has commenced, what is the liberal indulgence that is now given to the press?

A. Besides the ex-officers of the former administrations, Mr. Burr, the second magistrate in the nation, is also given up to the printers, as free and lawful plunder; and I have almost burst my sides with laughing, to see with what art and industry our imported patriots, Duane and Cheetham, have hunted him down, while the subalterns all set up their barking and followed the chase.

Q. Is not your party indebted to the talents and influence of Mr. Burr for its triumph over the federalists?

A. This debt is cancelled. Mr. Burr is excommunicated; he lies under the bann of our church; he is an outlaw: it has been discovered that he eat and drank with heretics—that he even offered, as a toast, this abominable, this treasonable sentiment, “the union of all honest men.” That man has sinned beyond the hopes of mercy; floods of tears would not avail to wash away his crimes:—The bull of the holy Vatican is thundered against him; its anathemas are poured upon his devoted head—and all patriotic printers are in duty bound to denounce him as a traitor, and to compare him to Benedict Arnold.*

* Mr. Burr has been actually denounced as a traitor, and has even been compared to Benedict Arnold, in some of the democratic papers.

WAR WITH HOLLAND!!!

Lord Hawkesbury, at the bar of the house, presented the following most gracious message from his majesty.

GEORGE R.

His majesty thinks it right to inform the house of commons, that, from an anxious desire to prevent the calamities of war being extended to the Batavian republic, he communicated to that government his disposition to respect their neutrality, provided that a similar disposition was manifested on the part of the French government, and that the French forces were forthwith withdrawn from the territories of the Batavian Republic. This proposition not having been admitted by the government of France, and measures having been recently taken by them, in direct violation of the independence of the Batavian republic, his majesty judged it expedient to direct his minister to leave the Hague; & has since given orders, that letters of marque & general reprisals shall be issued against the Batavian republic and its subjects.

His majesty the deepest and prosperity and Provinces. He ceedings with the conduct of left him no alternative of what is due the security and dominions.

BREMEN AND HAMBURG

T A K E N.

The Hamburg mail brings the following article of intelligence.

BREMEN, June 5,
(12 o'clock at night)

Yesterday evening a French general entered this city. He immediately waited on the chief burgomaster, and desired, that all English property here, under whatever denomination it might be, should be taken possession of: And that all English sailors at present in this place, as well as all other persons belonging to the English service, should be put under arrest. As soon as this demand was made, the officer who came with it, went away to general Mortier.”

What answer was given to this insolent and audacious request, we are not informed—and what number of English person what quality of English property, might be at this time in Bremen, we cannot pretend to calculate. But, be that as it may, this outrage will not be confined to British subjects—some pretext will soon be found to involve the natives themselves in the confiscation.

There is little doubt but the same measure will take place at Hamburg, which, it was generally thought, would escape the danger that threatened it—but we are sorry to add, that such an expectation must be disappointed, as the French troops took possession of it on Sunday last, the 12th instant.

DENMARK.

A letter from MENTZ, May 31st says,

“A proposal has been made by the French government to stop the passage of the Sound, and all access to the Baltic for English vessels.”

We little doubt that the French government seriously entertains this project. The assenting to it, on the part of Denmark would be the declaration of war against England.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 17.

The party prints are outrageous, because the English are capturing Dutch vessels. Let them recollect, that at the time measures were adopted to curb the insolence of Bonaparte, Mr. Lifton, the English envoy in Holland, offered them protection, if they would make an effort to throw off the French yoke. The Myrmidons would have gladly done so, but found themselves too firmly fettered in Gallic chains; they, therefore, have nothing left, but to smoke their pipes, and view their reviving commerce pay for their temerity.

Another PATRIOTIC toast, at South Ambo—“John Adams, Arnold and Jay.”

Never since the declaration of independence, has the outrage of the party broke out with such desperate and vindictive fury as on the last great anniversary. It would seem, that, driven to desperation, they heap indiscriminate abuse upon those men who stood foremost in asserting their rights; for, who went before Adams and Jay on that great occasion?

It seems that it was not enough to league them with a man who treacherously attempted to betray those liberties they then maintained, and now with equal warmth in their hearts support, but to this abomination a junto of Jacobins must add—

“ May they seek from door to door for subsistence, as Hannibal the Carthaginian general did, after having been overthrown and totally defeated, by the Roman republic.”

Bellarus was suffered to beg his bread from door to door by his ungrateful country, whose battles he had fought. De Grasse was slighted by France for his gallant defence against the British fleet under Rodney—but these men were not ranked with traitors!

It is not with a view of attempting an eulogium on Adams and Jay, that we here bring them to public view—that would be arrogance. The informed, the grateful, and the moderate, well know and revere their virtues. It is meant, merely to place a favorite Jacobinical exclamation at the end of their dirty scraps of abuse, in its appropriate sense,

“ O shame where is thy blush! !”

Every man whose heart is not vitiated beyond all hope of cure, and whose head is not beguiled by his heart, must be convinced that on the score of one complaint only of the many which Bonaparte has evaded to answer, England had just cause for war. We mean the demand of that insolent tyrant to stop the liberty of the press in England. The American who does not think that one attempt a just cause, of war deserves, as the editor of the National Enquirer emphatically and truly says, to be the slave of an ambitious usurper—and to crouch beneath the rod of an unfeeling tyrant.

It would hardly be believed in France, much less in England, that there could be found even among the hired lack-jades of Jacobinism in his country, one man of improbity hardened, & of effrontry unblushing enough to hazard an assertion of such a gross falsehood, as that England has occasioned the war. None but a Jacobin would say so. And of Jacobins we know enough to say that such is their abhorrence of all those who perverted that Corps d'Enfer from tramping on the world, that they would be glad to see England crushed even by the Tyrant Bonaparte.

A letter from a very respectable commercial house in Liverpool, to another in this city, under date of the 15th June, has the following observations:

“ Should you be disposed to make any shipments to this market, the undermentioned articles appear to me most worthy your attention:

“ CORRON, which has now become a leading article of importation from America. Some considerable purchases have been made of the low quality on speculation since the war; and should Martinique and the Dutch colonies fail into the possession of this country, it is thought a very considerable demand will arise for manufactured cotton, and consequently keep prices of the raw material steady, if not occasion an advance. This may be looked upon as a safe article of import at least.

“ TURPENTINE. The import of late has been so moderate, this article (if new and thin) is likely to pay very well.

“ TAR, if the import is not great, will probably advance, prices being moderate.

“ ASHES. The import of these has for a long time been exceeding small, and it is highly probable, prices may advance. Pearls are very scarce: Old Pois have been dull, but within a few days much enquiry has been made for New Pois at an advance of a few shillings above the prices quoted herewith, 4s. per cwt.

“ INIGO. But little at market, and this article would meet a ready sale.

“ FLOUR. Of this article, at the present moment, the stocks are large, and we have now the prospect of an abundant harvest, so that we may rather expect some little decline than any advance. The prices are, however, so very moderate, that nothing can be lost by shipments somewhat under the annexed quotations, (37 to 38s per bbl.) and in case of an unfavorable harvest, which may happen, an immense profit would probably attend them.

“ INIGO. But little at market, and this article would meet a ready sale.

“ STAVES cannot be expected long to maintain the present high prices (White Oak Pipe 33 to 40l. bhd. 25 to 31. b. 11 to 18l.)

THE PARSON AND THE PAINTER.

A certain Rector employed a Painter to ornament the Church with allegorical devices adapted to the holiness of the walls. The Painters cherubs had rueful faces in the Parson's eye—he warmly thus attacked the artist:

“ Why daub my Church, man, with such phiz-zes grim?
Cherubs i'th' dumps, with tears in either eye?”

To which the Painter respectfully replied:

“ Because your Reverence says, that Cherubim And
